Will your family lose Medicaid benefits? Your success coach can help navigate resources.

About 15 million people will soon lose Medicaid coverage with projections showing that nearly half of those people will be Black or Hispanic.

When will it happen? The speed and mechanics of redeterminations will vary by state. A majority of states plan to take 12 to 14 months to complete the eligibility verifications, with many states beginning to remove people from Medicaid rolls by late spring or early summer.

Americans could start losing Medicaid coverage in April

Arizona, Arkansas, Idaho, New Hampshire and South Dakota will begin terminating residents deemed ineligible for Medicaid in April. Other states will follow.

What will people do? The changes in eligibility could lead to more people signing up for private coverage through the Affordable Care Act's marketplaces, where some people who lose Medicaid coverage will be eligible for free plans. But hundreds of thousands of people could end up in the coverage gap in states that have not expanded Medicaid under the Affordable Care Act, with incomes too low for subsidized coverage through those marketplaces but too high to qualify for Medicaid.

Where can you go for help? Your Success Coach can help you navigate public assistance, compare plans on the marketplace, explore resources to fill in the gaps, create a budget that works for your family, brainstorm goals, and make it through the stress of life's pressures so you can also succeed at work.
